

Self-Certified Abuser Intervention Programs

The programs included on the attached list are Abuser Intervention Programs (AIPs). AIPs are programs specifically designed as interventions for perpetrators of intimate partner abuse. They are different from anger management programs, which are designed as interventions for perpetrators of violence against strangers, acquaintances, or others who are not intimate partners. Anger management programs focus on anger control and avoiding outbursts of anger that lead to violence. AIPs focus on power and control issues in the intimate relationship, which is generally believed to be at the root of violence and other forms of abuse directed at intimate partners.

Further, the self-certified AIPs listed on the following pages have voluntarily affirmed that they comply with the “Operational Guidelines for Domestic Violence Abuser Intervention Programs in Maryland.” The Guidelines, which were created by the Attorney General’s and Lt. Governor’s Family Violence Council, set forth policies and procedures that are designed to maximize victim safety and promote abuser accountability as well as program accountability to the courts and other referring organizations.

Some of the providers on the attached list also offer anger management programs; however there is no system available for voluntary self-certification or monitoring of anger management programs in Maryland.

If you have questions about this list of Self-Certified Abuser Intervention Programs, please call Carol Doctrow, Research Associate, Family Violence Council, at 410-576-6411.
