

Mediation Organizations

There are several different mediation organizations that may be helpful in advancing your mediation goals, connecting you with a group of colleagues committed to excellence, and to helping you to expand your network.

Maryland Organizations

ACR's Chapters enable members to meet and share ideas with colleagues in their community and participate in activities that support their professional development.

Community Mediation Maryland supports the community mediation centers throughout Maryland to provide quality conflict resolution services to their community at no charge or on a sliding scale. This is done by providing training and quality assurance to centers and their volunteers.

The Maryland Council for Dispute Resolution (MCDR) is devoted to the personal and professional growth of Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) practitioners in the state of Maryland.

The MSBA Alternative Dispute Resolution Section encourages the Courts and lawyers to incorporate alternative dispute resolution (ADR) into their systems and practices; actively engages in the work of the ADR Commission; and monitors state and national legislation and proposals on uniform confidentiality rules and unauthorized practice of law.

National Organizations

The Section of Dispute Resolution provides members with accessible, relevant and cutting-edge information, practice tips, and skill-building opportunities.

The goal of the Section is to create a permanent organization of individuals qualified to provide alternative dispute resolution services to members of the Association and the general public.

We are a community where leaders in dispute prevention and resolution come together to pursue a mutual goal of less conflict and more purpose.

NAFCM supports peacemakers by being the hub for advancing the work of community mediation, aggregating the wisdom of community mediation and amplifying the voice of community mediators.
